

There is a country with a forest that grows large birch trees. The country's king has a blade, hidden under his crown, called Loca.

---

Animal called Ewes hide on the edge of the forest. They have long hair all over their body, and wander on legs as long as the average man is tall. If the people wander there, soldiers, using their magic, will create large memorials for them, as the wanderers create Ewes, when they are decapitated by magical soldiers, and Ewes speak like them. Rules are necessary. Either my soldiers kill you, or you give me everything you have and become my slave.

---

Tidu lives on the border of the forest. The king hated him, but an honest man, named, Sîe, wanted his son. Tidu valued his home at the edge of the forest, and he worked hard for his family. So, a plan was made.

---

Before that, the Wanderers-turned-Ewes told stories of the end of the world. If Loca were to cross paths with Sîe or an Ewe, then they meet the blade's edge. Then, the Ewes learned to trade and he had an escape. Loca was turned into the soldiers, to be more of a defence for myself, as I could defend myself better with a magical army.

---

Tidu spoke with the Ewes, and before swearing his soul, convinced them his son was a king. Sîe was made immortal, and Loca was turned into the magical army by the Ewe. The Ewe grabbed Sîe and the Ewe gave Sîe back to Tidu.

---

So, Tidu went home, and found the soldiers, surprised that they were in his forest. The soldiers' souls worked to divide the forest, but the king stopped the miracle from working by hiding it under his crown. Tidu and his animal hurried to the edge of the forest and Sîe walked home.